Research interests	Most of my research is on UK public policy. Since 1997 my long-standing interest in devolution in the UK, which goes back to my time on Tyne &amp; Wear County Council, has revived. I wrote the ESRC Programme on devolution in the UK. Several projects touch the allocation of public expenditure to the nations and regions of the UK. These include the Leverhulme and DTLR projects listed under "Research grants and contracts awarded". The DTLR (now ODPM) contract was a large 18-month project on "Identifying the flow of domestic and European expenditure into the English regions". The final report has been highly commended by HM Treasury, for instance in the 2004 Budget reports. Other work is for HM Treasury and the Treasury Committee of the House of Commons. The work aims to examine the existing funding mechanisms, both for the non-English territories of the UK and for England, and to suggest possible alternatives. Work on the defects of the UK's property taxes and possible alternatives has aroused a great deal of interest in local government circles. My research on the Aberfan disaster (21.10.66) aimed to compare the official reaction to Aberfan with that to more recent disasters. In July 1997 the Secretary of State for Wales returned £150,000 to the Aberfan disaster funds, which I argued had been unlawfully taken in 1969. He paid tribute to me for bringing this result about. The research has covered administrative collapse; the management of trauma; the right management of a charitable disaster fund; health and safety regulation; and how governments react when a government agency fails.

I work on the properties of electoral systems and appropriate measures of proportionality. I have been a consultant and expert witness for City of Wakefield Metropolitan District Council, Wansdyke District Council, Norwich City Council, Lambeth Borough Council and Southwark Borough Council on parliamentary boundary proposals affecting them. My work was cited by both front benches during the Commons debate on the 4th Review. I was a member of the expert group for the Jenkins Commission on the Electoral System on the properties of electoral systems in 1998. I have given evidence to numerous Select Committees and related bodies, including the Nolan (Neill) Committee on Standards in Public Life and to the Wakeham Commission on the UK second chamber. The last has generated work on church establishment.

Outside public policy, I have worked for many years on the history of social choice. I have uncovered previously unknown documents dating from between 1283 and 1896 which show that there was a prehistory to social choice before Borda and Condorcet; that Condorcet wrote far more than his Essai of 1785, most of it easier to understand; that Condorcet proposed the axiom of Independence from Irrelevant Alternatives; that a practical Condorcet method was tried (but failed) in Geneva in 1794. These works, which I have translated with colleagues, alter our understanding of the history of the subject, and contribute to still current issues such as whether a practically computable Condorcet-extension scheme exists. Kenneth Arrow agrees that the works we have republished foreshadow his Independence axiom. My work on Adam Smith is at the intersection of public policy and social science history.

Duncan Black, the co-founder (with Arrow) of social choice, died in January 1991, I helped to save Black's papers (now in the University of Glasgow). Black's book on Lewis Carroll and proportional representation was published in a version completed and edited by myself and colleagues in 1996, and the second edition of his Theory of Committees and Elections in 1998.

Other academic work applies the rational-choice paradigm to UK political history, with particular focus on the Peel (1841-6), Gladstone (1886, 1892-4), and Liberal/Coalition (1906-22) administrations.

Administrative experience:

I have served on two local authorities: Tyne & Wear County Council (1973--9) and Oxford City Council (1982--6). On Tyne & Wear CC, I chaired the Economic Development Committee, served on various regional quangos, and took part in negotiations with central government on behalf of the authority. On Oxford CC I led my party group throughout. I am Vice-Chairman and Appeals Director of the Welshpool & Llanfair Light Railway Preservation Co. Ltd., a charitable guarantee company (Director of the company 1978-92 and 1999--; qualified steam and/or diesel locomotive driver 1976- ). In that capacity I secured a large grant from the Heritage Lottery Fund towards the railway's Centenary Appeal, and have acted as consultant to other preserved railways preparing applications to HLF. My success rate for HLF applications is 100%. I have held office in Oxford Preparative Meeting (Treasurer, 1995—9; elder 2000-2) and Witney Monthly Meeting, both of the Religious Society of Friends.

I have been Investment Bursar (Property) for Nuffield College, in charge of managing (with professional advice) a real estate portfolio of about £40 million. I have created, and serve as the first Director of, the Public Policy Unit in my Department. I was Director of Graduate Admissions, Dept of Politics & International Studies, University of Warwick, 1992—3; Director of Graduate Studies in Politics, Oxford University, 1994—6; Director of Research Training in Politics, Oxford University, 1996—9.
