

KEYNOTE LECTURE:

Immigration, Integration and Mobility: New Agendas for Migration Studies after 7 May 2015

5.30pm, Tuesday 23 June
Seminar room A, Manor road building

Professor Adrian Favell

Professor of Sociology, Centre d'études européennes, Sciences Po

'Adrian Favell is a maverick. His work is always interesting, pushing the boundaries of 'normal' social science and expanding our knowledge of human mobility in all its dimensions... A collection of his most provocative essays, sure to top the reading list of every serious scholar of migration.'

James F Hollifield, Professor of Political Science, Southern Methodist University, Dallas

'Adrian Favell is not only the sharpest critic of European migration studies but also a pioneer who takes transnationalism and transdisciplinarity seriously in his own work. The ten essays in this book are a 'best of' selection representative of Favell's interventions... A critical mirror for a booming research field still struggling to understand its topic... Indispensable reading.'

Rainer Bauböck

Professor of Social and Political Theory, European University Institute, Florence

The lecture presents the argument of Adrian Favell's new book, focusing on how new internal migrations and mobilities in Europe since the 2000s have disturbed traditional nation-state centred conceptions of immigration and integration.

All are welcome (registration opens from 5pm at the Manor road building entrance, please sign-in on arrival)

Admission with University card
Non-University card holders please provide photographic ID

The convenors are most grateful to OXPO for funding this event