During the first term of the academic year much effort was focussed on finalising the department’s submission for the Research Excellence Framework (REF). We are confident we have made a strong submission reflecting the quality and depth of our research, and are most grateful to our REF Coordinator, Petra Schleiter, and to all members of the department who contributed to its preparation.

Another major endeavour for the year has been preparations for the Oxford Q-Step Centre under the Directorship of Catherine De Vries. The department was delighted to receive funding of £1.2m for a five year programme to create a step-change in the quantitative methods training for our undergraduates. Michaelmas term 2014 will see the first cohort of undergraduates participate in the new programme of training and in preparation for this two new academic appointments - Andrew Eggers and Andrea Ruggeri - were made in Summer 2014. Moreover, a new teaching lab has been created in the building and our undergraduate curriculum has been reformed to accommodate the embedding of the Q-Step training.

During this academic year we welcomed five new faculty members: Ben Ansell (Comparative Democratisation), Daniel Butt (Political Theory), Elias Dinas (Comparative Politics), Jane Gingrich (Comparative Political Economy), and Todd Hall (International Relations of China), who have all in their first year made positive contributions to the teaching and research of the department. During the year, we also have sadly had to say goodbye to three outstanding colleagues – Christopher Hood, the Gladstone Professor of Government, on his retirement and two colleagues on their move to other institutions: Mark Philp, a former Head of Department, who has taken up a Chair at the University of Warwick, and Jeremy Waldron who returned to New York University.

In January 2014, I took over the Headship of the department from Stephen Whitefield. Stephen held the position for three and a half years and the department is most grateful to him for his stewardship and leadership during his tenure. During my first two terms I focussed with colleagues on a number of underpinning themes: communications to both internal and external audiences, including as a first phase project the redevelopment of our external website due Autumn 2014; the strengthening of our management information systems; and beginning a revitalisation of the research organisation of the department. All of these are preconditions for our work on development of the department, strengthening our links with our alumni, seeking a solid and enduring financial basis for our doctoral education, and building up our establishment of research projects. I am grateful for the support of our academic officers and our administrative team in this work.
Teaching

UNDERGRADUATE TEACHING

Philosophy, Politics and Economics (PPE) continues to be the department’s largest undergraduate joint degree, popular with both UK and international students. 24 nationalities were represented in the Michaelmas term 2013 intake of 265 students. The applicant entry success rate for the year was 16.04% and this stiff competition ensured that PPE continues to secure high calibre students. Approximately 86% of PPE Finals students took at least one Politics paper as part of their summer 2013 exams, highlighting that Politics remains the most popular discipline within the joint degree.

Moreover the department’s second joint undergraduate degree, History and Politics, continues to prove popular. The course had an intake of 40 in Michaelmas term 2013.

Appointments, Prizes and Awards

Professor Simon Caney, University Lecturer in Political Theory, was appointed to join the Nuffield Council on Bioethics. The Council was established by the Nuffield Foundation in 1991, in response to concerns that there was no government-sponsored national body responsible for overseeing developments in biomedicine and biotechnology.

Professor Sir Ivor Crewe AcSS, Master of University College and sub-faculty member of DPIR, was appointed President of the Academy of Social Sciences. The President’s role is to represent the Academy at public meetings and events, and Sir Ivor will serve for three years from 1 January 2014. The Academy comprises more than 900 individual academicians – awarded the title for services to social science – and 46 learned societies, representing nearly 90,000 social scientists.

Dr Rama Mani, CIS Senior Research Associate, with the Komitee für Grundrechte und Demokratie (Committee for Basic Rights and Democracy, Cologne), received the Peter Becker Prize for Peace and Conflict Research from the Chancellor of Philipps-Universität Marburg. The prize, awarded every two years, is the highest endowed award for peace and conflict research in Germany.

Dr Rasmus Kleis Nielsen, Postdoctoral Research Fellow, won the American Political Science Association’s 2014 Doris Graber Award for his book Ground Wars: Personalized Communication in Political Campaigns, published by Princeton University Press in 2012. The award recognises the best book published on political communication in the last ten years.

RESEARCH FUNDING

During the first part of this year, we focussed on submitting the Research Excellence Framework (REF) return successfully, which was completed in November 2013. Needless to say, this was a hectic time, but we are pleased to have met the REF deadline and look forward to receiving the results in December 2014.

The end of the REF has given us a much needed window of opportunity to revisit and formalise certain internal policy matters with regards to applicants, funding applications, budgets and incentives. In addition, this has been an opportune time to focus on the new website for the department which is currently underway with a dedicated section for knowledge exchange. This will be an excellent opportunity to showcase the results of the department’s research to an internal and external audience whilst simultaneously providing a platform for further exchange and visibility.

The funding applications submitted last year included a number of applications that focussed on areas of research that are of increasing relevance in the international political arena. These include research areas ranging from ‘The Individualisation of War, Reconfiguring the Ethics, Law and Politics of Armed Conflict’, ‘Support for Democracy in Egypt’ to ‘Nationalism and State Building at a Crucial Turning Point: Authoritarianism and Political Mobilisation in Ukraine and Russia’. We are extremely happy that these applications were successful and that the projects are now underway. We anticipate that more news of these projects will be available on the new website in the autumn.

Center for International Studies (CIS)

http://cis.politics.ox.ac.uk

Director:
Professor Kalypso Nicolaïdis

The Centre for International Studies (CIS) was established in 1992 to promote and advance research in International Relations in Oxford. As a focal point for projects and activities in IR, CIS sponsors externally funded research projects, convenes conferences and seminars and hosts visiting scholars. The work of CIS involves close association with four major research programmes (the Oxford Institute for Ethics, Law and Armed Conflict; South East European Studies at Oxford; the Interdepartmental Programme on Justice and Democracy Beyond the State; and the Political Economy of Financial Markets Programme), a range of smaller research projects and the individual research of faculty and postdoctoral fellows.

Highlights of Events

Workshops and Conferences
- ‘(Economic) Justice beyond the State’, 18 November 2013, Professor Frank Garcia (Boston College Law School)
• CIS Conversations: ‘Where Are The Wise Women?: Female Scholars of International Relations’, 7 May 2014, Mara Tchalakov (DPIR)
• CIS Book Manuscript Workshop: ‘Letting Down the Guard: Developing Countries, Bounded Rationality, and the Diffusion of Investment Treaties’, 19 May 2014, Dr Lauge Poulsen (DPIR)
• The Fourth Global Institutional Reform (GIR) Workshop, 6-7 June 2014, Professor Andrew Hurrell (DPIR)
• CIS Conversations: ‘What should the EU do about Ukraine’, 10 June 2014, Nina Kruglikova (doctoral student, Oxford) and Yevgen Lantsuzovskyy (Visiting doctoral student, Catholic University of Eichstatt-Ingolstadt)

Lectures
• “A torch of fire, a cup of water”: Myanmar between Democratization and Ethnic War’, 21 October 2013, Nbyen Dan Hkung Awng (Charles Wallace Trust Visiting Research Fellow, DPIR)
• ‘Identity and International Security: U.S. Relations with China and India’, 6 November 2013, Dr Jarrod Hayes (Assistant Professor of International Relations, Georgia Institute of Technology)
• ‘Political Economy of Domestic and Global Monetary Institutions: A Developing Country Perspective’, 3 December 2013, Professor Hamza Ali Malik (Charles Wallace Trust Visiting Research Fellow, DPIR)
• ‘Conflict, Intervention and Social (Re)construction’, 4 December 2013, Dr Dana Eyre (Research Associate, CIS) & Whit Mason (Research Associate, CIS)
• ‘Winning friends abroad: Can Britain’s cultural power maintain its influence in the modern world?’; 27 February 2014, Sir Martin Davidson (CEO, British Council)
• ‘Why Nordic Majoritarian Democracies Have Escaped the European Court of Justice’, 7 May 2014, Professor Marlene Wind (Copenhagen)

Oxford Institute for Ethics, Law and Armed Conflict (ELAC)

http://www.elac.ox.ac.uk

Directors:
Professor Jennifer Welsh
Dapo Akande
Dr David Rodin

Associate Directors:
Dr Hugo Slim
Dr Janina Dill

ELAC is a leading global centre for the interdisciplinary study of the ethics, law, and politics of armed conflict. Its central aim is to strengthen law, norms and institutions to restrain, regulate and prevent armed conflict.
Highlights of Events

Workshops and Conferences

• ‘Transatlantic Workshop on International Law and Armed Conflict’. In July 2014, ELAC and HRFG hosted a two day transatlantic workshop with the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) attended by leading academics, military lawyers and officials from the UK, the US, and the Canadian Governments.

• Conference on the Legal Remedies for Corruptions. In June 2014, ELAC, the Open Societies Foundation, and the Justice Initiative held a conference to discuss how litigation, based on innovative legal approaches, has been useful in challenging, mitigating, remediating and deterring corruption.

• Humanitarian Workers: Personal Ethics, Psychology, and Lifestyle. In December 2013, ELAC held a Conference on humanitarian actors as part of its continuing Humanitarian Ethics Project. The interdisciplinary conference involved European researchers and humanitarian practitioners.

Seminars and Other Events

• ‘Culture, Religion and Contemporary Geopolitics Seminar Series’. Through Michaelmas and Hilary terms, Dr Slim and Dr Hancock (St Peter’s, Oxford) co-convened a seminar series to enable a discussion of religion in society and international relations today. Speakers included Professor Monica Duffy (Oxford), Baroness Elisabeth Berridge, and Professor Christopher Coker (LSE) among others.

• Lunchtime Seminar, December 2013. ELAC convened a lunchtime seminar on International Relations and the International Criminal Court with Dr Matthew Killingsworth (Tasmania).

Research Highlights:

• ‘Military Enhancement: Design for Responsibility and Combat Systems’. This collaborative project with the 3TU. Centre for Ethics and Technology, (Delft) examines the ethical and legal implications of new military technology.

• ‘Guide to the Law Relating to Humanitarian Relief Operations in Situations of Armed Conflict’. ELAC and the Oxford Martin Programme on (HRFG) undertook a project with the United Nations Office of the Coordinator for Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA) intended to clarify aspects of laws that regulate relief operations during armed conflicts. The project will develop a comprehensive guide to the law in this area, based on a series of expert meetings held in Oxford.

• Ethics’ special edition on ‘Ending Wars’. The leading journal of moral philosophy Ethics, published in 2014 a special edition on the topic of ‘Ending Wars’ consisting of six papers presented at the 2011 ELAC Annual Workshop. The volume features papers by ELAC affiliated researchers, Dr David Rodin (ELAC, Oxford) and Professor Cécile Fabre (Philosophy, Oxford).

Oxford Spring School in Quantitative Methods for Social Research

http://springschool.politics.ox.ac.uk

Director:
Professor Geoffrey Evans

The Oxford Spring School is a week of events targeted at political and social science researchers who already have training in and experience of quantitative research and are seeking to extend and broaden their skills. Other shorter workshops take place at various points throughout the year. The Spring School is linked with the Interuniversity Consortium for Political and Social Research (ICPSR) Summer School at the University of Michigan. ts reputation attracts faculty, research students and applied professionals from around the globe.

Highlights of Events

Annual Week of Spring School Courses

The annual week of Spring School courses took place on 22-25 April 2014, the theme being ‘Multilevel Analysis for the Social Sciences’. Topics included: Hierarchical Linear Models; Extending the HLM; Hierarchical Generalized Linear Models; Multilevel Analysis in Practice.

The course instructor was Professor Marco Steenbergen (University of Zurich), a leading expert in the field of multi-level modelling. His theoretically oriented teaching programme was accompanied by a well-received, practical application session taught by Dr Sergi Pardos-Prado (Oxford). Dr Pardos-Prado has previously provided Multilevel Modelling courses in several European universities as well as in the graduate training programme in DPIR and the Social Sciences Doctoral Training Centre.

Short Course
‘Bayesian Hierarchical Models for Social Research’, 23-25 June 2014, Professor Jeff Gill (Washington University in St. Louis). Topics included: What is Bayesian Inference; Review of Multilevel Model Basics; Specifying Bayesian Regression Models; Running a Simple Model in JAGS; Running a Multilevel Model in JAGS; Nonlinear Multilevel Models, Diagnostics, Convergence, and Summarization.

Public Policy Unit (PPU)

http://ppu.politics.ox.ac.uk

Directors:
Dr Stuart White
Professor Iain McLean (Research Director)

The Centre’s aims and objectives are to undertake policy-relevant academic research and, by means of events which bring academics and policymakers into discussion of this research, provide a bridge between academic research and policymaking.

Centre for the Study of Social Justice (CSSJ)

http://social-justice.politics.ox.ac.uk/

Director:
Professor Simon Caney

The Centre for the Study of Social Justice (CSSJ) provides a forum that brings together Oxford’s large group of political theorists with an interest in problems of social justice, broadly conceived. Its core membership comes mainly from the Department of Politics and International Relations, but also includes colleagues in Philosophy, Law and Economics. Through its fortnightly lunchtime seminars, it provides a focus and a point of contact for post-doctoral fellows in political theory, as well as for academic visitors to Oxford associated with the Centre. It also sponsors conferences and workshops organised by its members on relevant topics.

Highlights of Events
Workshop
• ‘Duties to Create and Support Just Institutions’, 10-11 June 2014, Dr Jesse Tomalty, with Dr Elizabeth Ashford and Dr Laura Valentini (funded by Nuffield College and the Society for Applied Philosophy). The speakers were Dr Elizabeth Ashford (St Andrews), Professor Simon Caney (Oxford), Professor Tim Hayward (Edinburgh), Dr Miririm Ronzoni (Manchester), Dr Avia Pasternak (University College London (UCL)), Professor Henry Shue (Oxford), Dr Jesse Tomalty (Oxford), Dr Laura Valentini (LSE), Professor Jeremy Waldron (Oxford) and Professor Leif Wenar (Kings College London (KCL)).

Lecture
• ‘Democracy, the Global Economic Crisis, and Economics as a Moral Science?’ Professor Ingrid Robeyns (Utrecht).

Seminars
• Papers were presented at the fortnightly seminar series by Dr David Birks (Philosophy, Oxford), Dr Daniel Butt (DPIR, Oxford), Professor Cécile Fabre (Philosophy, Oxford), Dr Keith Hyams (Politics and IR, Reading), Dr Jaakkko Kuosmanen (Law, Oxford), Professor David Miller (DPIR, Oxford), Professor Margaret Moore
OXPO is an established meeting point for social science scholars in Oxford and at Sciences Po, who work on the comparative analysis of the evolution of political systems and societies, in Europe and beyond. It coordinates various comparative research projects that contribute toward this goal and offers opportunities to develop French-British collaborative projects.

Details of books, journal articles, chapters or papers explicitly supported by OXPO, or completed by their authors thanks to the visit they made under the OXPO exchange framework, can be found at: http://oxpo.politics.ox.ac.uk/publications/index.asp

Research Projects
• Reuters Institute Digital News Report 2014

The Reuters Institute Digital Report 2014 reveals new insights about digital news consumption, made widely available through a publication and dedicated... interactive website. Based on a representative YouGov survey of online news consumers across ten countries – UK, US, Germany, France, Denmark, Finland, Spain, Italy, Japan and Urban Brazil – the report tracks changing digital news behaviour. In its third year the project continues to attract considerable international interest.

- The Role of Media in Democratisation
  This research, funded by DPIR, is designed to explore the role of media in democratising countries, particularly in the Middle East. It examines the implications of changing local media landscapes and the impacts of enhanced freedom of expression on democratic socialisation. It focuses on the Middle East after the Arab Spring.

- TV reporting of the IPCC 2013/14 reports
  This project examines how popular television news programmes in six countries (Australia, Brazil, China, Germany, India, and the UK) cover the latest reports by the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC). It examines the amount of coverage, the type of coverage and the dominant narratives found in evening news bulletins, which are often the most trusted and watched by the public.
  Funders: The Grantham Research Institute on Climate Change and the Environment, London School of Economics, and Klif (the Climate and Pollution Agency in Norway, a directorate of the Environment Ministry).

- The Euro Crisis, Media Coverage, and Perceptions of Europe within the EU
  This project examines how Europeans understand the challenges facing the Euro and the workings of the European Union and European Central Bank through the news media of their countries. It is being undertaken with a network of partners in France, Finland, Belgium, Germany, Greece, Italy, the Netherlands, Poland and Spain.
  Funder: John Fell Fund

- The Changing Nature of Journalistic Work and its Implications
  This project is designed to explore how entrepreneurial journalism is changing the work of journalism, its norms and practices, the organisation and direction of journalistic labour, perceptions of journalists’ identity, work/life boundaries and the implications of these changes for career and financial planning, expected rewards, and career paths.
  Funder: Green Templeton College Small Grant.

- Visualisation of Academic Research
  This project aims to cultivate awareness of the demand for visualised research and the ways in which it can improve media coverage and public understanding of complex issues, and use of academic research in practice. A ‘KickStart Award’ in partnership with NESTA and the Alliance for Useful Evidence.

External Relations

Partnerships and Collaborations include:

- Events: BBC College of Journalism, BBC World Service, Global Editors’ Network, Open Government, Alliance for Useful Evidence, NESTA, City University, Media Development Foundation, Panos South Asia, British Deputy High Commission, Chennai and Observer Research Foundation.

Finance

THE DEPARTMENT concluded its financial year 2013-14 with a deficit of £262k. In addition to the deficit, £61k from reserves was invested in capital projects including infrastructure upgrade and website projects, still leaving the department with a healthy £1.3 million reserves.

This year has been a transition year for DPIR. Several major grants including an ERC grant ended early in the year and an Anglo-German programme jointly run with Bremen University came to its scheduled closure. Both contributed to a decrease in research and overheads income. Other externally funded projects will come on line in 2014-15, including the £1.2m received from the ESRC and Nuffield Foundation for the Oxford Q-Step Centre. We also saw a dip in our donation and other income line, some of which is due to technical changes involving internal charging mechanisms. The department’s increased investment in its studentship programme is reflected in higher expenditure in the non-pay line compared to last year.

Challenges over the next year include managing the present uncertainty regarding the financial implications of the Research Excellence Framework, continuing with our development programme with the focus of maximising our financial support for doctoral research, and realising our potential with regard to research income.
