The role

The Reuters Institute for the Study of Journalism are seeking a Digital Journalist to help increase the Reuters Institute’s digital footprint and better fulfil our mission of exploring the future of journalism worldwide. Reporting to the Head of Communications and Editorial you will bring practical experience as a working journalist, by writing and editing original and distinctive news articles and social media posts.

The Digital Journalist will write, produce and disseminate a variety of high-quality content across a range of distribution channels and media outlets. Using creative and practical skills they will turn innovative ideas into positive actions that will help increase the digital output of the Reuters Institute among target audiences all over the world.

This is an exceptional opportunity for a dynamic and creative journalist to join an outstanding team committed to the Institute’s mission to connect academic scholarship of the highest standards to major issues of relevance to journalists and editors from around the world.

Responsibilities

- Report, write and edit original news stories for the Institute’s website, with a special focus on journalism in the Global South

- Prepare and schedule posts for the Institute’s channels, including Telegram, Twitter, Facebook, Instagram, LinkedIn and the newsletter we sent every week to thousands of subscribers worldwide
- Curate academic papers and news articles on the future of journalism from respected news sources, with a focus on geographic, gender and ethnic diversity.
- Draft press releases for the Institute’s reports and factsheets and engage with our researchers to ensure their work is covered accurately by journalists worldwide
- Implement the Institute’s brand guidelines and ensure brand coherence across communication, event and publications platforms
- Keep track of the Institute’s reach and coverage through tools such as Cision and Google Analytics, and use these metrics to make decisions to increase the Institute’s digital footprint

Selection criteria

Essential selection criteria

- Educated to degree level in a substantive area of social science including journalism/media studies.
- Excellent written and verbal skills, with proven ability to write and edit social media posts and engaging news stories to the highest standards
- Relevant experience as a journalist, working in a newsroom or as a freelance reporter and excellent analytical, organizational and project management skills
- Knowledge and experience of using social media channels and digital content distribution mechanisms to achieve communications objectives
- An interest in climate change and journalism innovation
- Strong creative outlook and the ability to work under pressure and to tight deadlines
- The ability to be a team worker, able to combine taking individual responsibility for key tasks, and confidently influence senior stakeholders
- Enthusiasm for the work and mission of the Institute and strong intellectual ability to translate complex academic work into effective communication;
- Experience with content management systems and digital tools such as Mailchimp, Twitter or Zoom

Desirable selection criteria

- The ability to produce content in global languages other than English such as Spanish, Arabic or French
- Experience of working in an international environment
- Experience of working with data and using Datawrapper
- The ability to record and edit audio and video content with specialised software (Zencastr, Audacity, Zoom, Kapwing).

Pre-employment screening

Standard checks

If you are offered the post, the offer will be subject to standard pre-employment checks. You will be asked to provide: proof of your right-to-work in the UK; proof of your identity; and (if we haven’t done so already) we will contact the referees you have nominated. You will also be asked to complete a health declaration so that you can tell us about any health conditions or disabilities for which you may need us to make appropriate adjustments.

Please read the candidate notes on the University's pre-employment screening procedures at: <https://www.jobs.ox.ac.uk/pre-employment-checks>

About the University of Oxford

Welcome to the University of Oxford. We aim to lead the world in research and education for the benefit of society both in the UK and globally. Department of Politics and International Relations

Politics and International Relations at Oxford University have a long and distinguished history in the education of leading figures in academia, politics, the media and public life, both in the UK and internationally. Teaching and research activities in this area were combined in 2000 to create a Department of Politics and International Relations. With around 90 academic staff, the Department is one of the largest departments internationally and consistently ranks very highly in national and international university guides for the subject. It is home to major research projects, a vibrant community of academic visitors, and a strong group of post-doctoral researchers, supported by highly competitive research fellowships, working in the full range of disciplinary sub-fields.

The Department is located in the Social Sciences building at Manor Road, along with the Department of Economics, and the integrated Social Science Library. The building provides excellent facilities including a lecture theatre, a large computer laboratory and a range of seminar rooms as well as a cafeteria and common room for use by both staff and students. The Manor Road Building is served by a shared IT and web team.

An experienced administrative team supports the Department's research and teaching activities. The Department's core administration currently comprises twenty two staff, grouped into teams that provide dedicated support for: Courses, Finance, HR, Research Support, and Communications and Alumni Relations. The administrative teams work closely with each other as well as with staff in other parts of the University, in particular with the Social Sciences division, Personnel Services, and Research Services, as well as with the University's many colleges.

The Department is responsible for the syllabus, provision of lectures and for the examination of undergraduate students, who are taught mainly by tutorials organised by college tutors. The MPhil degrees are now terminal degrees for a range of students who proceed to further professional training and to careers in public or private organisations. For many students, the MPhil also forms the first two years of a four-year doctoral programme. The MPhil gives students advanced scholarly and theoretically sophisticated substantial study of the subject, together with training in research design and associated methodological analysis and critique, and advanced training in research methods. Alumni of the MPhil and the DPhil have gone on to form a wide network of Oxford-trained academics with positions in university departments and research units worldwide, and have taken up positions of leadership in numerous public and private institutions across the globe.

Social Sciences Division

The University's academic departments and faculties are organised into four large groups, known as Academic Divisions (Social Sciences, Mathematical, Physical and Life Sciences (MPLS), Medical Sciences, and Humanities). The divisions are responsible for academic strategy and operational planning, oversight of the teaching and research of their constituent departments and faculties, and for personnel and resource management. The social sciences at Oxford are distinctive for both their depth and breadth, with over 1,000 academic and research staff working across fifteen departments, faculties and schools. The Head of the Social Sciences Division is Professor Timothy Power.

The Division is a world-leading centre of research and education in the social sciences. The Times Higher Education (THE) University Rankings placed the University of Oxford as number one in the world for Social Sciences in 2018 and 2019. REF 2014 confirmed Oxford as the UK powerhouse for research in the social sciences, accounting for more 4* research than any other institution. Our academic and research staff and students are international thought leaders, generating new evidence, insights and policy tools with which to address some of the major global challenges facing humanity, such as sustainable resource management, poverty and forced migration, effective governance and justice. As well as active interdisciplinary links with researchers in other divisions at Oxford, we engage and collaborate extensively with other universities and a wide range of governmental and non-governmental practitioner communities such as law, business, public health and welfare, international development and education around the world. The Division has an extensive portfolio of external funders, partners and supporters, with competitively-awarded external research income exceeding £50 million per year and philanthropic income over £25 million a year. As part of our commitment to equality, eleven of our departments have achieved bronze Athena SWAN awards (a UK accreditation scheme recognising organisations' commitment to equality and diversity, particularly in gender): the Oxford Internet Institute, Global and Area Studies, Sociology, Archaeology, the Blavatnik School of Government, Economics, Education, International Development, Law, Anthropology & Museum Ethnography, and the Saïd Business School; and the School of Geography and the Environment holds an Athena SWAN silver award.

The Division delivers an exceptional range of high-quality educational programmes all underpinned by the innovative research being undertaken by our academics. The student body is made up of over 2,000 undergraduate students, nearly 3,000 students studying postgraduate taught programmes and 1,200 postgraduate research students. The programmes we offer are wide-ranging, often interdisciplinary and include professionally-oriented provision in areas such as business, law and education. The Division is home to several of Oxford's most widely recognised teaching programmes, such as Philosophy, Politics and Economics (PPE) at undergraduate level; and at the Masters level programmes such as the Bachelor in Civil Law (BCL), Environmental Change and Management, International Relations, and Social Data Science.

The Reuters Institute for the Study of Journalism

The Reuters Institute for the Study of Journalism was established in 2006 with core funding from the Thomson Reuters Foundation to bring to the University the study of journalism and its relationship to matters of public policy, politics and wider social and cultural trends.

The Institute is an integral part of the Department of Politics and International Relations. The Institute incorporates the Journalist Fellowship Programme which began in 1983 and is affiliated with Green Templeton College. The Institute is located in Green Templeton College premises in Norham Gardens and is supported by its own administrative staff. The Institute has a Steering Committee, which includes representatives outside the University from the world of journalism. It is accountable to the General Purposes Committee and to the Head of the Department of Politics and International Relations.

The Institute is committed to the rigorous, international, comparative study of journalism. It pursues this through:

- Research Programmes, which provide timely, accessible, and evidence-based independent analysis of issues facing journalism and news media around the world, and include a series of RISJ publications, as well as more specialised academic articles and book-length treatments of important topics.
- The Journalist Fellowship Programme, which brings high calibre mid-career practising journalists to Oxford and offers them a period of reflection and an opportunity to carry out a piece of relevant in-depth research, away from the pressure of tight deadlines.
- Leadership Programmes, which gather editors, executives, and journalists in leadership roles in small, intimate, off-the-record settings to engage with each other, exchange best practices and lessons learned, and benefit from current research relevant to the challenges they face.

Research:

The Institute is expanding its research activity and its research strategy is currently organised around three broad areas of focus:

- Relationships between Journalism and Democracy and Accountability – including journalism's role in holding power to account; issues around international news providers and the trust placed in them; the role of the media in societies undergoing radical political transformation; identifying the most important elements of journalism for the functioning of a democratic society; and examining the impact of different political systems on the ability of journalism to perform its role.
- The Business of Journalism – involving comparative assessment of the financial pressures on journalism in a range of countries, the responses to those pressures, and the implications of each for the long term future of quality journalism and its democratic functions. This area also includes work on regulatory frameworks for and different forms of intervention in journalism and media markets.
- The Evolving Practice of Journalism – including issues such as journalism as a profession and what that means in different countries; the impact of the rise of citizen journalism; blogging and social media; the particular issues posed by specific forms of journalism, e.g. business journalism; journalism and PR; and science and environmental reporting, where journalists often have to act as translators between specialists and a wider public.

The news media have, within the last decade or so, been disrupted by huge and fast-moving changes in the economic and technological models that had been in place for generations or more. The growth of social media, new players and new platforms has changed journalism forever as well as creating an existential threat to forms of news. The ability of billions of people to publish has created a vast amount of unreliable - and fake - news which now competes with more established forms of journalism. The RISJ must have a powerful voice in the debates around where journalism is going and how it is practised. In addition to chronicling these dramatic changes, RISJ should help illuminate the road ahead by communicating directly with communities of journalists who are at the sharp end of the digital revolution.

Further information about the RISJ can be found at: <https://reutersinstitute.politics.ox.ac.uk/> .

The University's policy on retirement

The University operates an Employer Justified Retirement Age (EJRA) for all academic posts and some academic-related posts. The University has adopted an EJRA of 30 September before the 69th birthday for all academic and academic-related staff in posts at grade 8 and above. The justification for this is explained at: <https://hr.admin.ox.ac.uk/the-ejra>

For existing employees, any employment beyond the retirement age is subject to approval through the procedures: <https://hr.admin.ox.ac.uk/the-ejra>

There is no normal or fixed age at which staff in posts at grades 1–7 have to retire. Staff at these grades may elect to retire in accordance with the rules of the applicable pension scheme, as may be amended from time to time.

Equality of opportunity

Entry into employment with the University and progression within employment will be determined only by personal merit and the application of criteria which are related to the duties of each particular post and the relevant salary structure. In all cases, ability to perform the job will be the primary consideration. No applicant or member of staff shall be discriminated against because of age, disability, gender reassignment, marriage or civil partnership, pregnancy or maternity, race, religion or belief, sex, or sexual orientation.

Benefits of working at the University

Employee benefits

University employees enjoy 38 days' paid holiday, generous pension schemes, travel discounts, and a variety of professional development opportunities.
